PRESS RELEASE

BGL BNP Paribas is proud to present, in its Doers & Thinkers lecture series,

Gideon Rachman, Chief Foreign Affairs Commentator of the Financial Times
Europe 2011: A Make or a Break?

What lies ahead for Europe? Faced with the turmoil of economic crisis, member countries' debt overloads, and its own internal disputes, how, exactly, will the European Union come through 2011? This question goes to the heart of concerns expressed by all stakeholders and observers of business and the economy. Gideon Rachman, Chief Foreign Affairs Commentator of the Financial Times, has no doubt that "2011 will be a decisive year for the EU for two main reasons: We will discover if the fiscal and economic reforms put in place this year will be enough to restore growth and solve the debt crisis. And we will find out whether the EU is capable of political reforms in response to the debt crisis."

A long-time observer of the business scene and a special guest in the BGL BNP Paribas "Doers & Thinkers" lecture series, Mr Rachman notes with regret the absence of a genuine European economic policy. In his view, that is a major threat to the future of the European Union, which is reduced to hoping that policy-making in countries put under severe pressure from the 2008 crisis will nonetheless function properly.

Gideon Rachman's analysis highlights the fundamental challenges of 2011 in a world economy where prospects are clouded by multiple uncertainties. His career path lends special credit to that analysis: Mr Rachman started his career with the BBC and then spent 15 years at The Economist before joining the Financial Times.

Doers & Thinkers lectures have been presented twice a year for nearly five years. Organized by BGL BNP Paribas especially for clients and special partners, they give audiences an opportunity to hear insights from either an entrepreneur (Doer) or a specialist from the world of academia or research (Thinker). In each case, the aim is to promote a spirit of entrepreneurship and innovation.
